Description et objectifs

The second semester will be organized around methodological and theoretical issues related to research in the social sciences. A selection of readings to be determined collectively (at the conclusion of the first semester) will be used to offer examples of how scholars develop theoretical frameworks and methodological approaches for exploring a range of social, political, and cultural issues in the contemporary United States. Students will examine the relevance of such works to their own research projects, which they will present to the class in a workshop setting.
